RESEARCH:

Main Projects in the Past:

1. School Stratification and Delinquent Behavior. Ph.D. Project, 1977-1979.

This work develops a macro-sociological perspective on the relationship among youth, stratification at school, and the political economy of which they are both a part. A historically grounded overview of school stratification in the United States and the connection between the "tracking" process and youth crime are specifically analyzed. Co-funded by the National Swedish Council for Crime Prevention and the National Swedish Social Science Research Council.

2. The Trial of Leonard Peltier, 1980-1983.

A historical analysis of the trial of American Indian Movement activist Leonard Peltier, with particular attention to the inconsistencies and contradictions in trial testimony and the relationship between race and social class in the legal system. This book remains in print and continues to be used in undergraduate, graduate, and law school courses, and it was nominated for the 1983 C. Wright Mills Award.

3. Capitalism, Patriarchy, and Crime, 1983-1986.

This book was the first theoretical analysis of crime from a socialist feminist perspective. I argue here that to understand class/gender inequality as well as the nature and causes of crime and victimization, capitalism and patriarchy must be conceptualized as interactive structures.

4. Masculinities and Crime, 1990-1993.

This work critiques and reconceptualizes criminological theory, articulating a structured-action perspective on masculinities and crime. The book was the initial part of a project on theory construction whose focus is the interrelation of race, class, gender, and crime and it has now become a classic in the field.

5. Crime as Structured Action: Gender, Race, Class, and Crime in the Making, 1995-1997. Second edition, 2014.

This book is a sequel to the earlier book on masculinities and crime and broadens the application of structured-action theory to more thoroughly analyze the way in which structure and action are woven inextricably in the ongoing activity of "making" gender, race, class and crime. The twin focal points of the approach are the inseparability of structure and action and the situational salience of gender, race, class and crime.

6. Nine Lives: Adolescent Masculinities, the Body, and Violence, 1997-1999.
The core of this study links the social construction of masculinities, the social context of boys' everyday lives, and some boys' use of sexual and/or assaultive violence. The key research questions are: What compels some boys to engage in violence and some boys not to? And why do those boys who engage in violence commit different types? The life-history method is used to collect boys' accounts of constructing masculinities and their relation to the body, sexuality, and varieties of violence and nonviolence.
7. Flesh & Blood: Adolescent Gender Diversity and Violence, 2002-2004.
This study provides an account of the connection among adolescent gender diversity, the body, and assaultive violence. It explores the history of criminology as a discipline, paying particular attention to the discipline's misgivings about the body, gender, and crime. The book examines in-depth life histories of white working-class boys and girls involved in assaultive violence. The chief questions here are: Why do some boys and some girls engage in assaultive violence? How are these violent boys and girls similar and different? And how are gender relations in specific settings—such as the family, the school, and the street—related to embodied violence and nonviolence by the same boys and girls? The analysis reveals both similarities and differences between assaultive boys and girls and the fallacy of the mind-body, sex-gender, and gender difference binaries.
8. Hegemonic Masculinities and Camouflaged Politics: Unmasking the Bush Dynasty and Its War Against Iraq, 2006-2009.
This study investigates historically the orchestration of regional and global hegemonic masculinities through the speeches of the two Bush presidents—George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush—as contrasting forms of communicative social action to “sell” the long-standing war against Iraq. The study makes the case for a multiplicity of hegemonic masculinities and outlines how state leaders may appeal to particular hegemonic masculinities in their attempt to “sell” wars and thereby camouflage salient political practices in the process. Nominated for the 2011 C. Wright Mills Award as well as the 2011 ASA Sex and Gender Section Distinguished Book Award.
9. Gender, Heterosexuality, and Youth Violence: The Struggle for Recognition, 2010-2012.
This work is the third and final book of the trilogy that includes Nine Lives and Flesh & Blood and investigates reactive violence and nonviolence by both boys and girls who all have been the victims of bullying at school. The study is unique in its comparative approach between violent and nonviolent youth, between boys and girls as offenders and non-offenders, between assaultive and sexual violence, and among a variety of masculinities and femininities. The study also addresses how heterosexuality is related to sex, gender, and certain forms of violence and nonviolence.

10. Masculinities in the Making, 2013-2015.

This project involves the revision of my structured action theory to specifically examine masculinities at the local, regional, and global levels. The theory emphasizes that agents draw upon social structures to engage in social action and in turn social structures are reproduced—and sometimes changed—through that same embodied social action. The bulk of the project is the application of this theory to three seemingly disparate case studies of wimps, genderqueers, and presidents, and examines what insight each might offer masculinities scholars in terms of knowledge about the social construction of masculinities and gender inequality.

Most Recent Projects:

1. Gender Reckonings: New Social Theory and Research, 2015-2018

This work involved co-editing—with Raewyn Connell, Pat Martin, and Michael Messner—a wonderful collection of original chapters on the conceptual contribution of feminist sociology to the future of gender studies. The book concentrates on the social dimensions of gender and opens up new pathways for this field of knowledge. Our offering is an edited volume of accomplished sociologists—from both the global North and the global South—whose work in formulating new gender concepts and frameworks, across continents and across generations, will serve as a guide to future innovative work. Our contributors are diverse and the range of issues they address—as well as how they approach them—are diverse. We are confident that this volume will make an important contribution to contemporary gender studies, and to the social sciences and the humanities more broadly.

2. Hegemonic Masculinity: Formulation, Reformulation, and Amplification, 2018

This book concentrates on the history of the concept of hegemonic masculinity and its unique applications. The bulk of the book centers on the “formulation,” “reformulation,” and “amplification” of the concept, and includes the “backstory” to the development of the concept, the actual formulation and initial applications of the concept, the eventual reformulation and subsequent applications of that reformulation and, finally, the amplification of the reformulated concept of hegemonic masculinity. The book also includes a chapter theorizing why and how hegemonic masculinities are constructed and the concluding chapter chronicles the prospects for social change toward more egalitarian gender relations. Hegemonic Masculinity: Formulation, Reformulation, and

Amplification brings together for the first time in one volume the history of the concept as well as a discussion and examination of the most important research accomplished on hegemonic masculinity over the last thirty years. I am optimistic this book will contribute to a more enlightened conceptualization of hegemonic masculinities.

3. Masculinities and Crime: A Quarter Century of Theory and Research, 25-Year Anniversary Edition, 2018.

My 1993 book, Masculinities and Crime, quickly became a classic text for social scientists examining the relationship between masculinities and crime. This new book is a complete revision of the first edition, and it is unique in its focus on my most important criminological research and theorizing over the past twenty-five years, as well as for its emphasis on selected studies by other scholars who represent the diversity of contemporary research on masculinities and crime. This anniversary edition brings together a combination of the “old” and the “new” to examine what insight each has to offer scholars in terms of knowledge about the social construction of masculinities and crime.

4. A Kaleidoscope of Identities: Reflexivity, Routine, and the Fluidity of Sex, Gender, and Sexuality, 2022.

This book builds on the work of feminist sociologists in examining the relationship among situational interaction, accountability, and relational and discursive social structures to uniquely conceptualize sex, gender, and sexual practice as both reflexive and routine. Drawing on nuanced and powerful life-history interviews, the book presents a new theoretical framework situating reflexivity and routine in a much more symbiotic relationship than has been previously acknowledged. Without privileging either, the book explores this relationship through a novel analysis of the way reflexivity and routine collaboratively shape sex, gender, and sexual identities over time and across space.
