You probably haven’t heard of 404 Ink, but the new indie Scottish publisher run by Heather McDaid and Laura Jones shot to sudden prominence in January 2017 thanks to a wildly successful Kickstarter campaign to fund their first book Nasty Women. They had all the money they needed in just three days; by the end of the campaign, they were 369% funded and had earned a ringing endorsement from Margaret Atwood. When the book was published on International Women’s Day, it bore Atwood’s quote on the cover.

I’m just one of about two dozen authors featured in Nasty Women, which is full to bursting with accounts on what it is to be a woman in the 21st century. My essay is about familial divides in Trump’s America, racism I’ve dealt with as a Latinx woman, and what it means to struggle with my own sense of self. But despite the title’s reference to Donald Trump’s infamous jab at Hillary Clinton, not every piece in the book deals specifically with Trump. They cover everything from Brexit to blogging as a Scottish Black woman to birth control to immigration. They also touch on topics like trans identity, being a survivor, and being fat. In short, Nasty Women is about claiming an insult as an identity and pushing back against the definitions of women long imposed upon us by society. We intend to keep telling our stories, and telling them loud.

The Gender Studies Student Organization is a group for students who are interested in gender and intersectional feminist politics and committed to working towards social justice. Gender Studies builds on the foundation of Women’s Studies, which was formed in order to understand the nature of women’s oppression and create significant social change. Gender Studies explores the nature of gender, and its intersection with other forms of difference and power, including class, race, ethnicity, ability, sexuality and religion. We are anti-racist, queer-friendly, accepting of all religions, and open to all students!

Fulfilling your Core Courses with WGS

Entry Year Experience:
EYE 109 Gender, Representation, and Resistance Drawing on many disciplines, we will explore ideas of gender roles in many cultures and throughout history, focusing on the following questions: What is gender? How is it represented historically and cross-culturally? How have people redefined its meanings and representations? Gender, Students will learn definitions of gender in diverse cultures and times; the ways gender shapes daily interactions and human relationships; and the ways social institutions distribute power, resources, and status based on such meanings and on their relations with race, ethnicity, age, class, ability, sexuality, and nation. Representation, students will consider the impact of mass media, education, and political discourse on gender construction. Resistance, students will discover how people have reconsidered, resisted, and transformed traditional gender roles & representations.

Socio-Cultural Analysis:
WGS 101 "Introduction to Women and Gender Studies" This course considers the economic, political, and social status of women and men and how ideas about femininity/masculinity and feminism are promoted through the media and other vehicles of culture. Books used by this course have included: Reviving Ophelia: Saving the Selves of Adolescent Girls by Mary Pipher, Dude, You're a Frog by C. J. Pascoe and Feminist Frontiers by Richardson, Taylor & Whittier.

Cultural Interpretations:
WGS 201 Women, Knowledge and Power examines the relationship between gender, assumptions about truth, and the ways both affect how we experience the world. Books from past sections of the course have included: The Creation of Feminist Consciousness by Gerda Lerner, A Room of One’s Own by Virginia Woolf, Handmaid's Tale by Margaret Atwood, and Black Feminist Thought by Patricia Hill Collins.

Ethical Inquiry, Social Responsibility & Citizenship:
WGS 380 "Politics of Difference" explores the consequences of using such identity categories as race, nationality, religion, and sex to shape culture and gender relations within it. Books assigned for this course have included: Gender Outlaw by Kate Bornstein, How Does it Feel to be a Problem by Moustafa Bayoumi, Hatreds by Zillah Eisenstein and Iran Awakening by Shireen Ebadi.

Diversity:
WGS 201: Women, Knowledge and Power AND WGS 390 "Contemporary Feminist Theories" introduces students to such feminist theoretical approaches as post-structuralism, Marxism, psychoanalysis, critical race theory, and post-colonialism. The focus of the course is the intimate relationships between feminist theories and feminist practices, locally and globally.

<td>Women and Gender Studies has been awarded a Maine Economic Improvement Fund planning grant. Iceland is ranked first in the world for the status of women. The US is ranked 28th, and Maine is ranked 19th among the states. WGS, working with our community partners and Icelandic experts, will help us formulate policies in Maine to increase female participation rates in industries where women are underrepresented. In addition, the WGS program seeks to establish study abroad opportunities for Maine students concerned with gender equity. We begin our collaboration with scholars from the University of Iceland’s Center for Research on Diversity and Gender this May at the Maine Women’s Studies Consortium retreat.

Sources and manifestations of both healthy and problematic aging and apply concepts drawn from the behavioral and social sciences to answer questions which artists, art historians, anthropologists, and critics ask about art. The works of art and philosophy considered will be drawn from a wide variety of cultural contexts. 3 credits.

WGS 245/PHI 220: Philosophy of Art

Web/Online
Session 2 (4 Weeks)
Professor Kate Wininger

What makes a person creative? What do artists think about their art? How do critics evaluate a work? If art is created for a cultural ritual or healing, is it to be understood differently? How do the circumstances of a work’s creation and reception affect its evaluation? How does a person’s class, ethnicity, or gender influence art work and its reception? Philosophers in the field of Aesthetics attempt to answer questions which artists, art historians, anthropologists, and critics ask about art. The works of art and philosophy considered will be drawn from a wide variety of cultural contexts. 3 credits.

WGS 265/ANT 255: Cultures of Africa

Web/Online
Session 2 (7 Weeks)
Professor Sarah Lockridge

Africa is a vast continent rich in cultural diversity. This course will explore a variety of African people and cultures south of the Sahara. Students will read ethnographic case studies about small-scale communities that focus on interrelated issues such as music, religion, politics, economics, geography, ethnicity, and gender. The course will consider the effects of colonial periods on indigenous populations but will emphasize post-independence Africans. Students will learn to challenge negative Western representations of Africa by focusing on the power and perseverance of African people and their cultures. 3 credits.

WGS 345/ENG 348: Gender, Sexuality and Literature

Web/Online
Session 1 (7 Weeks)
Professor Jessica Ouellette

In the age of digital connectivities (YouTube, Facebook, and Twitter), we are constantly encountering and engaging in transnational circuits of ideas and knowledge production. How do we see the connectivity that happens on digital sites such as Facebook and Twitter happen in literature? How do we see the production of identity that occurs on YouTube occur in literary texts? This course will focus on fictional, dramatic, and poetic accounts of the experiences of gender, sexuality, and culture as seen through the eyes of different writers. In reading literary texts from various parts of the world, we will interrogate how knowledge about gender, sexuality, and culture gets produced and circulated through writing and textual representation. 3 credits.

WGS 345/PHI 312: Morality in African Literature & Film

Web/Online
Session 2 (4 Weeks)
Professor Kate Wininger

See page 6 for course description.

WGS 365/SWO 375: Gender & Aging

Web/Online
Session 2 (7 Weeks)
Professor Susan Flieran

This course is designed to inform students about aging issues that differentially affect women and men. Students will analyze the sources and manifestations of both healthy and problematic aging and apply concepts drawn from the behavioral and social sciences, and from clinical and community practice. This course will incorporate knowledge of the bio-psycho-social aspects of the aging process and the interplay of interpersonal, environmental and cultural forces that influence aging. Students are expected to acquire skills in assessing individual behavior of older persons based on application of theoretical ideas to contemporary situations and enhance their human service practice with older adults and their families. Service Learning experience may be available to undergraduate students in the course (10 hours). 3 credits.

Danella Demary

My capstone project addresses the use of feminist pedagogy in student-centered classroom approaches. This topic integrates my passion for education alongside my love of feminist pedagogical practices that I have experienced as a student, and hope to incorporate in my classroom, as a teacher. My topic is personal to me, it explores areas of education, feminist practice and theory, which all ignite passion in me.

My advice for WGS students who are thinking about capstone is to write about something you love. Think about something you want to know more about. Take that something and shape it with your questions and ideas and then research it. Use your resources. Talk to your classmates and your professors. Engage in your topic and incorporate your passion into that writing.

Shanisa Rodriguez

My project is based on my internship this semester at an elderly care home. I’m focusing on women in care work and the value of it in society. I will be writing a research paper on it and using my Women and Gender Studies knowledge to help guide me through it.

My advice would be to start thinking about your project early and to choose something that you are truly interested in. It’s much easier to research and write about something you like rather than something that bores you!

Leah Kravette

My capstone project is a thesis research paper. I am interviewing six activists about their personal art practices and their experiences of self care and burnout to see if art helps prevent burnout and “compassion fatigue.” I am also doing literature research for context around burnout and if this kind of study has been done before, and will be making something non-academic to share with folks after my thesis is done.

I chose this topic because, as an activist, I see that the people I care about (and myself) need access and frequently even need permission to engage in self care practices that are truly restorative, because it is easy to get so caught up in the work that you lose energy eventually. This is a good project for me because I can use the information I find to directly support people I care about who do activist work. So my advice is to pick a topic or an internship that you are really excited about, or that you have something at stake in besides your degree - senioritis really happens! And it will be easy to lose focus unless you have an independent interest in your work. Good luck!

Students wishing to take on a thesis for their Capstone project should start their planning now! In the Spring of Junior Year, you should decide on a topic and identify your primary thesis advisor. You can then register for HON 311 or WGS 470, Independent Study for the fall of your Senior Year. Call 780-4862 for more information or to make an appointment with your advisor!
This course provides an overview of the process of social research utilizing qualitative methods. Topics include the logic and philosophy considered will be drawn from a wide variety of cultural contexts.

Drawing on many disciplines, EYE 109 asks, what is gender and how is it represented historically and cross-culturally? Students consider the impact of mass media, education and political discourse on gender construction and resistance. 3 credits

What is gender? Is it innate or learned? How many genders are there? How many sexes are there? What is gender inequality? How does gender intersect with other categories of difference such as race, class and sexuality? Those are questions that feminist, gender and sexuality studies take up, and we will explore them in this class. We will begin with a brief set of readings in feminist classics, and will move on to study key terms and themes in women’s studies, including social constructionism, intersectionality, transgender theory, post-colonial feminisms, and black feminist theory. Special topics will include the #MeToo movement, and Beyoncé’s Lemonade and celebrity feminism. 3 credits.

This course explores the role of women who produce arts and crafts for the global tourist market. All over the world, women are improving their socio-economic status, investing in their families, and contributing to community development through their involvement in tourism. Tourism is perhaps the largest-scale movement of goods, services, and people in human history. We will learn about the historical and contemporary experiences of women from many different cultures such as: examples from Latin America, South Asia, Africa, and Asia. Course content includes themes of cultural heritage, culture change, traditional versus tourist art, hosts versus guests, gender inequality, fair trade and community development 3 credits.

This interdisciplinary course examines the ways in which motherhood is represented in various cultural forms (including film, literature, and political rhetoric) and from within different historical and cultural contexts. Contemporary psychological theories will be considered in terms of how they are used to prescribe normative demands on women and mothers and also how they attribute various powers to mothers that then contribute to the construction of particular social policies and practices. 3 credits.

In this course we will analyze representations of women in cinema from several countries from the 1960s to the present. The thematic focus of this course is the relationships between mothers and children from the perspective of early cinema to contemporary cinematic works. We will study the ways in which female characters intervene in this historiography of representations to contest patriarchal structures and challenge the conventions of binary gender roles and heterosexual norms. 3 credits.

Central to the course are the ways that “differences” are embedded and enacted in the context of power relations. While the specific content of this course is flexible, it will analyze the advantages and disadvantages of using race, ethnicity, nationality, class, age, and sexuality as categories of analysis. Prerequisites: WST 101I or EYE 109, WST 201 or permission of the instructor. Offered fall semester 3 credits.
